Fennecs

The fennec is a small fox that lives in sandy desert. It is found in northern Africa, across the Sahara and in the north part of Saudi Arabia. It has huge ears that can help him to lose excess heat during the day and locate small insects and mammals at night. The fennec can hear insects walking over sand from a large distance. It can survive long periods without drinking water. The light pale colour of the fennecs coat may provide camouflage against the desert sand and also help the animal with intense heat of the day.

The fennec may live up to 12 years. The Algerian team of football is named after this animal.

Now, the fennec is endangered for several reasons: loss of habitat; lack of food and extensive hunting...
